I would like to express my sincere gratitude to Aditya Birla Capital Limited for providing me the opportunity to complete my Corporate Internship Program in the Marketing Communications & Sales function. The internship gave me practical exposure to the life insurance industry, competitor analysis, consumer research, content planning, traditional media planning, and campaign development, helping me connect classroom learning with real-world marketing practices.

I am especially thankful to my corporate mentor, Mr. Nikesh Ruparil, for his guidance, valuable insights, and continuous support throughout the internship. His inputs helped me better understand consumer behaviour, competitor strategies, brand trust, and effective marketing communication in the life insurance industry.

I also express my sincere gratitude to my faculty mentor, Dr. Karan Grover, and the faculty members of FIIB for their academic guidance, feedback, and encouragement throughout the internship and project stages.

Finally, I thank my team at Aditya Birla Capital who contributed to my learning experience and helped me gain valuable practical insights into marketing communication and the life insurance industry.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This interim report outlines the progress and practical learnings acquired during my Corporate Internship Program at Aditya Birla Capital Limited. I am working as a Marketing Communication Intern for the duration of 14 April 2026 to 10 July 2026.

The internship project focuses on the private life insurance sector in India. The central research question is: how does brand trust shape consumer decision-making when purchasing private life insurance? The objective is to analyse the trust dimensions that drive or inhibit insurance purchase intention, identify communication gaps, and develop evidence-based recommendations for ABSLI's marketing team.

As part of my internship, I trained in the industries relevant to ABSLI, analysed ABSLI's social media presence, benchmarked competitors, researched consumers in multiple target groups, planned content for social media, planned traditional media, completed cost analysis, and created concepts and scripts for communication and advertising.

The realizations from these activities were used to create a trust-based method of communicating and to develop an integrated media strategy to reposition life insurance as a long-term financial security and wealth creation tool. Together, these activities led to the formulation of campaign ideas and recommendations for communication that were included in the final report.

1. COMPANY OVERVIEW

Aditya Birla Capital Limited is the primary financial service provider for the Aditya Birla Group, which is one of the world's largest assembled companies. The company's offering includes various methods to assist individuals in preparing for their future, creating wealth, and achieving financial freedom through long-term financial planning by providing products and services.

The life insurance entity of Aditya Birla Capital is Aditya Birla Sun Life Insurance (ABSLI), which is a partnership with Sun Life Financial Inc. of Canada. In addition to offering a very diverse array of life insurance products, such as term insurance, ULIPs, endowments, and retirement, ABSLI places substantial focus on improving financial literacy for the consumer and facilitating understanding through customer-centric messaging.

In order to support customers in many areas, Aditya Birla Capital has a diverse array of products, including:

- Life Insurance
- Health Insurance
- Asset Management
- Wealth Management
- Lending Solutions
- Financial Advisory Services

The marketing and communication strategy for the Aditya Birla Capital is to simplify complicated financial products so consumers with different income levels have the ability to quantify how valuable long-term financial planning is to them. One of the primary purposes of introducing insurance as a perceived liability is to change the perception of insurance as an absolute necessity to have as a part of your financial portfolio - this objective is part of the mission for this internship project.

2. INTRODUCTION OF INTERNSHIP PROJECT

Project Topic: Role of Brand Trust in Consumer Decision-Making for Private Life Insurance in India

Over the past several years, the private life insurance market in India has grown immensely. However, overall penetration is still relatively low (3.2% of GDP) according to the IRDAI (2024). While financial literacy is on the rise and there continues to be an increase in the number of people from the middle class, many consumers remain unwilling to purchase a private life insurance policy (delaying or avoiding altogether) due to a lack of trust in the ability of the insurance company to fulfil long-term commitments.

The primary goal of this project is to determine how brand trust influences consumer decision-making within private life insurance and identify communication strategies that would allow ABSLI to connect with consumers regarding the promises made by brands versus how they are perceived.

In the beginning stages of the project, I built a base level of understanding of private life insurance (the industry, competitive landscape, communication strategies/approaches of the top life insurance companies.). From there, I was able to focus on primary consumer research, content planning and campaign creation.

Major Areas Covered
Brand Trust and Consumer Behaviour Research
Competitor Strategy and Social Media Analysis
Consumer Segmentation and Questionnaire Research
Social Media Content Planning
Advertisement Script Development
Traditional Media Planning
AI Case Application

3. INTERNSHIP PROGRESS SUMMARY

The table below shows the week-by-week breakdown of the work done since the internship started.

WEEK	DURATION	AREA OF LEARNING	KEY ACTIVITIES
Week 1	14 April-20 April	Company Induction & Insurance Fundamentals	Attended induction and orientation sessions. Developed understanding of Aditya Birla Capital, life insurance products, industry structure, consumer behaviour concepts, and the importance of trust in financial services.
Week 2	21 Apr – 27 Apr	Marketing Communication & Consumer Segmentation	Learned the four pillars of advertising and studied customer segmentation approaches. Understood communication strategies used by financial services brands and analysed different consumer groups relevant to life insurance marketing.
Week 3	28 Apr – 4 May	Social Media Analysis (ABSLI)	Conducted analysis of ABSLI's Instagram platform, focusing on content categories, communication themes, posting patterns, audience engagement, and brand communication approaches.
Week 4	5 May – 11 May	Consumer Research & Questionnaire Design	Designed questionnaires and conducted primary interactions with consumer segments including new parents and self-employed individuals to understand investment behaviour, financial priorities, and insurance perceptions.

Week 5	12 May – 18 May	Consumer Behaviour Analysis	Continued response collection and analysed consumer attitudes towards financial planning, trust factors, insurance awareness, and purchase considerations across different segments.
Week 6	19 May – 25 May	Competitor Analysis	Analysed communication strategies of HDFC Life, Tata AIA, SBI Life, ICICI Prudential, Kotak Life, Axis Max Life and Bajaj Allianz Life. Documented content themes, posting frequency, communication approaches, and engagement patterns through PPTs and Excel sheets.
Week 7	26 May – 1 Jun	Social Media Planning	Participated in social media planning activities for ABSLI. Contributed to content ideation, communication themes, audience targeting discussions, and preliminary content calendar development based on consumer and competitor insights.
Week 8	2 – 8 June	Traditional Media Planning	Analysed television channels, radio stations, metro, airports and newspaper options based on target audience reach, media consumption patterns, and advertisement costs to support campaign planning.
Week 9	9 – 15 June	Media Costing Analysis	Evaluated advertising costs across TV, radio, metro, airports and print media to understand budget allocation and channel selection decisions.
Week 10	16-22 June	Campaign Development	Developed campaign concepts aimed at repositioning life insurance as a long-term investment and financial planning tool rather than an expense. Defined campaign objectives, communication themes and key messages aligned with trust-building goals.

Week 11	23 June – 29 June	Campaign Development	Working on campaign concepts aimed at positioning life insurance as a long-term investment and financial planning tool rather than an expense.
Week 12	30 June – 6 July	Content Design & Creative Development	Creating content concepts and communication ideas for different consumer segments based on insights gathered through research and competitor analysis.
Week 13	7 July – 10 July	Consumer Insight Integration	Consolidating findings from questionnaires, competitor analysis, and primary & secondary research to identify communication opportunities and consumer concerns.

4. INTERNSHIP WORK AND DELIVERABLES

4.1 Insurance Industry Understanding and Trust Context

The first part of this internship was about understanding the private life insurance industry in India specifically looking at consumer perception of long-term financial security and how brand trust plays an important role in the communication of that message. This report covers a detailed study of consumer behaviours and attitudes towards long-term financial security and the type of information that brands need to communicate in order to reposition their products as parts of a complete long-term financial plan.

A key finding was whether insurance brands were succeeding in their attempts to change consumer perception of the insurance products they offer, with traditional insurance views of paying a premium for an unpredictable future value viewed by many to be an expense with no return or value. Many leading brands of insurance are attempting to overcome this situation by repositioning the products they currently market to consumers as part of a total long term financial plan rather than as pure protection against potential losses, a task that will require many, if not all, of those brands to build and maintain consumer trust in their brand over long periods of time.

Core Strategic Focus Areas

- Addressing the “Trust Deficit” by identifying historical barriers related to the establishment of consumer trust in the claims settlement process and the role that transparency in the communication strategy plays in overcoming this barrier.
- Understanding how different types of insurance products can be marketed (i.e., structured Investment vehicles such as Universal Life Insurance Policies (ULIP) and Term Insurance Policies) to achieve a balance between risk management and potential investment returns.
- Developing an understanding of how leading brands are changing their marketing messages from those based on fear of loss or potential loss to messages that promote consumer empowerment and encourage financial confidence and proactive long-term planning.

Key Learnings

Insurance marketing cannot rely on short-term promotional tactics. Because the product delivers value far into the future, the communication strategy must focus on sustained narrative building, financial literacy, and establishing brand credibility over extended periods.

4.2 Competitor Analysis

The Indian private life insurance industry has been evaluated for how they are currently communicating by performing a structured audit across seven of the largest competing insurers. This resulted in mapping each insurer's market position, platform choices, style of execution as well as the trust signals used in their communication strategies.

Competitor Brand	Core Value Proposition	Target Segments Highlighted	Dominant Campaign Themes	Platform Execution Strategy
------------------	------------------------	-----------------------------	--------------------------	-----------------------------

HDFC Life	Pride in financial independence and self-reliance (Sar Utha Ke Jiyo)	Working professionals, pre-retirement planners, salaried individuals	Dignity in retirement, independent family security, long-term planning	Heavy focus on LinkedIn for professional reach; interactive video content on YouTube
SBI Life	Celebration of personal milestones backed by protection (Apne Liye, Apno Ke Liye)	Tier-2 & Tier-3 demographics, middle-income families	Family dependencies, fulfilling personal dreams alongside securing dependents	Broad-reach Facebook campaigns; regional language video storytelling
Tata AIA	Reliability, premium legacy, and structured wealth protection	High-net-worth individuals (HNIs), young affluent parents	Comprehensive wellness, stress-free legacy planning, elite wealth solutions	Visual-heavy storytelling on Instagram; corporate thought leadership on LinkedIn
ICICI Prudential	Security, tech-driven claim convenience, and modern financial readiness	New-age digital buyers, tech-savvy salaried professionals	Smart wealth creation, instant digital issuance, financial protection for early careers	Data-driven targeted ads on X (Twitter); high engagement app-ecosystem cross-promotions
Kotak Life	Complete protection and contextualised support (Hum Hain... Hamesha)	Urban middle class, business owners, single parents	Transparency in claim settlements, long-term commitment, structural safety	Customer testimonial videos on YouTube; regular educational graphics on Facebook
Axis Max Life	Realising long-term financial milestones (You Are the Difference)	Mid-to-high income professionals, self-employed individuals	Financial milestones (child education, marriage), proactive risk hedging	Conceptual web series and multi-part video campaigns on YouTube and Instagram
Bajaj Allianz Life	Enabling life goals and aspirations (Life Goals. Done.)	Millennials, first-time job seekers, young parents, entrepreneurs	Future readiness, goal-based micro-investing, turning ambitions into reality	High-frequency creative campaigns across Instagram, Facebook, YouTube, and X

Strategic Parameters Analysed

Parameter	Objective
Content Strategy	Understanding communication approach and trust signal integration
Value Proposition	Identifying customer benefits and trust-building messages highlighted
Customer Segments	Understanding target audience and life-stage segmentation
Platform Usage	Analysing multi-platform social media presence and execution
Campaign Themes	Understanding core messaging strategy and trust-building narrative
Customer Engagement	Evaluating audience interaction and community-building efforts
Product Communication	Studying product promotion methods and complexity reduction approaches

Key Learnings

The most successful Insurers within the industry do not promote their products directly, but rather focus on emotional story-telling, life transitions, and family security. By doing this they have successfully positioned themselves as enablers of achieving personal goals and building connection through an emotional connection versus a product feature connection.

4.3 Consumer Behaviour Research and Segmentation

To ground the theoretical trust framework in primary data, field research was conducted through an online questionnaire and targeted consumer interactions. This research mapped financial priorities, trust perceptions, insurance attitudes, and purchase barriers across multiple demographic segments.

Target Consumer Segment	Primary Research & Financial Focus	Key Motivators & Triggers	Critical Communication Barrier
Working Professionals	Tax optimisation under Section 80C, long-term wealth preservation and investment-linked insurance	Annual financial cycles, professional milestones, income growth events	Scepticism toward long lock-in periods, hidden charges, and claim settlement reliability
Couples (Newly Married)	Shift from individual to joint financial security planning, asset building, liability protection	Legal marriage, shared household planning, joint loan commitments	View insurance as a low-priority discussion compared to lifestyle and housing assets
Mid to High Income Individuals	High-value wealth creation, premium legacy transfer, estate planning and tax efficiency	Capital preservation goals, portfolio diversification events, business succession	Low tolerance for generic, non-customised product communication and perceived brand arrogance
Parents with Pre-Teens	Early-stage child higher education funding, goal-locked savings and compounding benefit	Growth milestones, rising school admissions fees, education cost inflation	Difficulty projecting actual cost inflation ten years into the future
Parents with Teens	High-ticket professional coaching fees, undergraduate funding security	Approaching college timelines, career decisions, international study aspirations	Fear of missing critical education goals due to sudden market volatility in ULIP products
Parents with Adult Children	Legacy security, post-retirement income, minimising dependent financial stress	Children entering employment, marriage preparations, retirement visibility	Fatigue from decades of paying insurance premiums; strong preference for liquidity
Individuals Away From Home	Personal financial independence, emergency health and life covers, income replacement	Relocation to metro hubs, distance from extended family safety net	Low awareness of structural insurance products beyond basic employer-provided health policy
Single Parents	Sole breadwinner risk coverage, absolute child security, strict liquidity requirements	Deep concern over unexpected vulnerability, ensuring	High stress regarding premium affordability and perceived rigidity of payment structures

		child's educational continuity
Self-Employed / Business Owners	Hedging volatile business cycles, safeguarding family assets from business liabilities	Market uncertainties, capital investments, business expansion phases	Fluctuating monthly cash flows make fixed annual premiums appear financially risky
Pre-Retirement Planners	Converting assets to guaranteed retirement income, wealth protection, medical corpus creation	Reaching late 40s or early 50s with visible retirement timelines	High anxiety regarding post-retirement inflation, healthcare costs, and annuity reliability
New Job Employees	Initiating basic financial hygiene, early tax-saving habits, first life insurance purchase	First salary credits, corporate on-boarding and HR-driven financial planning sessions	Total unfamiliarity with insurance terminology; views products as unnecessarily complex
Women Entrepreneurs	Capital independence, family financial shielding, business continuity insurance	Growing business revenues, setting personal financial footprints	Marketing narratives have historically overlooked women as primary financial decision-makers

Key Learnings

Financial priorities and trust concerns shift clearly with life stages. A young professional evaluates insurance primarily through tax efficiency and brand reputation, whereas a new parent evaluates it through reliability of claim settlement and protection certainty. Each segment requires highly tailored trust messaging, not a single broadcast communication approach.

4.4 Brand Trust Value Mapping and Consumer Insights

A detailed analysis was performed of brand trust and value by referencing what competitors are communicating with regard their consumers, and then comparing that to the central consumer database. This involved looking at the three dimensions of trust defined in the literature (competence, benevolence and integrity) and determining how each of those applied to the specific communications and perceived gaps in each consumer segment.

Trust Value Framework Architecture

ABILITY TRUST LAYER

High Claim Settlement Ratios • Product Competence Communication • Financial Strength Signals

BENEVOLENCE TRUST LAYER

Customer-First Messaging • Life-Stage Relevance • Financial Literacy Investments

INTEGRITY TRUST LAYER

Transparent Communication • Consistent Brand Behaviour • Honest Product Framing

The Protection Gap and Trust Gap Assessment

A significant result of the primary research is the existence of a "Protection Gap" that is further exacerbated by a "Trust Gap" for consumers in urban areas. Most of the respondents understood what types of products such as savings accounts, mutual funds, and fixed deposits are, but tended to underestimate their own Life Value and did not believe that their insurer would pay them their claim when it is due. Most also believed that their workplace group term insurance was adequate, and many confused short-term savings products with a more fundamental financial risk transfer. The most notable barrier to acquiring additional coverage, and this was consistent across all segments, is lack of trust in the brand and not price

Key Learnings

People are willing to buy insurance, but they will not do so because they do not trust the insurance companies to provide reliable products and services. While consumers value having financial protection, they are not sure that insurance companies can deliver these services reliably, thus creating an opportunity for marketers to communicate trustworthiness by using one or more of the three dimensions of trust (ability, benevolence, integrity) consistently across all points of contact between consumers and insurance companies.

4.5 Content Strategy and Social Media Planning

The research and social media audit completed for ABSLI have led to the development of defined, strategic content plans for both the Instagram and Facebook accounts for ABSLI. Through these defined, strategic content plans, the intent is to replace random posting of content with a strategic blend of content that builds trust in the brand, but also keeps the target consumers engaged.

Strategic Content Mix - Trust Signal Integration

Content Classification	Core Objective	Trust Dimension Targeted
Value-Based Content	Translating product features into tangible lifestyle benefits and financial outcomes	Benevolence: showing the brand acts in the consumer's long-term interest

Testimonial Content	Establishing third-party validation through real customer stories of claim settlement	Ability + Integrity: demonstrating that the brand delivers on its promises
Informative Content	Building structural trust by sharing CSR data, claim ratios, and financial milestones	Integrity: transparent communication of performance metrics
Product-Based Content	Demystifying complex policy elements in plain language for everyday consumers	Ability: demonstrating product competence and simplicity
Social Cause Content	Linking corporate purpose to financial literacy campaigns and community impact	Benevolence: demonstrating care beyond the transactional relationship
Engagement Content	Breaking digital barriers through interactive polls, quizzes, and myth-busting content	All three: reducing fear, building familiarity, and encouraging dialogue
Calendar Content	Humanising the brand by connecting with consumers during cultural and life milestones	Benevolence: demonstrating emotional relevance to the consumer's life
Current Trend Content	Participating in digital conversations to boost brand visibility among younger audiences	Ability: demonstrating that the brand is modern, accessible, and relevant

Key Learnings

To foster high engagement, a balanced approach to content distribution is needed, linking every type of content to a specific goal of building trust. Just bombarding consumers with products will sabotage trust and relying only on trendy content will dilute the brand's authority. The most effective strategy will involve using a combination of content types, with each piece demonstrating capability, creating benevolence, and reinforcing integrity. The analysis of the social media and planning of content have shown the need for all types of consumer touchpoints to provide a consistent experience and build trust in the communication. Furthermore, even though the digital channel can offer many ways for consumers to engage and develop relationships, it is evident that because life insurance is such a high involvement product category, consumers must be exposed to the message more broadly and repeatedly in order for them to feel comfortable purchasing a life insurance policy. These lessons have driven the industry to look for more traditional media opportunities and to develop an integrated communication approach that will allow for better outreach to consumers across multiple channels.

4.6 Communication Development and Creative Conceptualisation

Consumer insight gathered from market research, competitor research, and content creation helped produce communication concepts and creative ideas that provided solutions for consumers' concerns and increased trust in brands. Different advertising scripts were created based on communication ideas developed for different types of consumers based on their financial priorities and types of barriers to trust. Through the duration of the internship, the types of communication activities continued to grow from planning to create digital content to larger campaigns that had the ability to run across both digital and traditional media channels, providing an integrated method to build awareness and trust.

Script Conceptualisation and Trust Framework

Segment Focus	Primary Conceptual Hook	Core Brand Message	Trust Dimension Addressed
Newly Married Couples	Moving from 'Me' to 'We'	Co-owning long-term financial responsibilities and future goals together	Benevolence: insurance as a joint act of care and commitment
Parents with Adult Children	True lifelong independence	Relieving children from the burden of future financial strain	Benevolence + Integrity: the brand honours its long-term promise
Parents with Teens	Uncompromised ambitions	Securing education funding and major life milestones regardless of uncertainty	Ability: product delivers when it matters most
Parents with Pre-Teens	The power of compounding	Early planning overcomes inflation and future education cost pressures	Ability + Benevolence: brand as a trusted long-term partner
Working Professionals	Smart tax preservation	Converting tax savings into future assets and lasting financial security	Integrity: transparent, honest communication of product value

The approach to communication was not to use dramatic, aggressive messaging that emphasizes fears as much as it was about using relatable/realistic examples and creating messages in everyday financial language as a reflection of what people are concerned about financially and want to achieve with their finances. The use of everyday conversational language through both Hindi & English (Hinglish) allowed for easier identification and understanding by the audience.

Over time, the internship expanded the scope of the communication activities from developing digital content strategies to creating broader campaign concepts, which could be used on both digital & traditional media platforms, and provide an integrated method to build brand awareness and trust.

Key Learnings

Communication development showed the value of creating a balance between emotion-based messaging vs. factual-based messaging (including compliance with regulations), maintaining message consistency across multiple communication platforms, and proving how using relevant and trustworthy messaging improves consumer trust in a brand & the consumer's confidence in the product. Jargon associated with the financial services industry and eliminating fear-based messaging.

4.7 Work Completed Summary Table

Activity	Status	Description
Insurance Industry Understanding	Completed	Studied life insurance fundamentals, trust theory, IMC frameworks, and the role of brand trust in consumer decision-making.
Competitor Analysis	Completed	Analysed communication strategies and trust-building approaches of seven life insurance competitors.
ABSLI Social Media Analysis	Completed	Conducted content audit of ABSLI's Instagram, coded posts by content type and trust signal category.
Competitor Social Media Analysis	Completed	Conducted detailed social media analysis of ICICI Prudential Life Insurance across Instagram, Facebook, YouTube, and X to understand content themes, communication approaches, and engagement patterns.
Consumer Behaviour Research	Completed	Designed and administered questionnaires to understand brand trust perceptions and purchase intentions across multiple segments.
Consumer Segmentation Analysis	Completed	Analysed responses from Mid-to-High Income Professionals, Individuals Living Away From Home, and Self-Employed & Business Owners.
Content Planning	Completed	Developed Instagram and Facebook content planners with eight content categories aligned to trust-building objectives.
Advertisement Script Development	Completed	Created scripts for five consumer segments; final review and trust-signal alignment in progress.

Traditional Media Planning	Completed	Analysed TV genres, preferred channels, newspaper and radio options, audience reach, and advertisement costing.
Media Costing Analysis	Completed	Studied consumer viewing preferences and calculating media costs for effective budget allocation.
Campaign Design	Completed	Designing campaign communication to reposition insurance as a necessary financial investment built on brand trust.
Content Design	Completed	Developing campaign creatives, posters, communication assets aligned to trust-building objectives and selected customer segments.
Final Media Plan Development	Completed	Integrating social media and traditional media plans into a comprehensive trust-centred communication strategy.

5. ANALYSIS AND FINDINGS

5.1 Findings of Consumer Research

The research on the expectations from consumers towards life insurance showed that while most consumers believe in the value of life insurance many still view it as an expense rather than a long term planning tool and investment. Products viewed as expenses were one of the major barriers to making a purchase of a life insurance product.

It was also shown through the research that trust is an important element within the life insurance category. Consumer confidence in a brand was affected more by the consumer's concern with the claims settlement processes, whether they can trust their life insurance company and whether they feel the life insurance company is long term, rather than the features or prices of the product.

Respondents had varying priority levels and concerns with respect to life insurance based on the different life stages they are in, with working professional respondents having more of a focus on tax benefits and building an estate while parent respondents were more focused on securing their family and planning for the future. Similarly, self-employed respondents had a higher priority on protecting their income and achieving financial stability. These different priorities indicate that consumers do not have a common need and require more relevant and segmented communication.

In conclusion, the findings of the research indicated that the primary challenge to the life insurance category is not a lack of awareness but a lack of trust. Therefore, strengthening consumer confidence through clear, relevant and trustworthy communication remains essential for improving purchase consideration and long-term brand relationships.

5.2 Competitor Findings

The study showed that most private life insurance companies used emotional stories and product-related messages related to different stages of life than they did advertising directly related to their products. Companies were found to connect better with consumers by using themes such as security for one's family, independence financially, planning for the future, and creating wealth.

Many of the top companies were found to be positioned as a long-term financial partner to their customers by promoting what their customers want to accomplish, rather than simply listing the features of their products. All companies studied utilized some combination of educational material, value-based marketing and/or actionable emotional content to build relationships with their customers and develop trust. In conclusion, the study showed that creating credibility and building emotional connections through marketing messages are as important as providing information on products to life insurers.

5.3 Communication Findings

The analysis of communication showed that consumers prefer simple, relevant and trust-based messages when purchasing life insurance. Additionally, consumers preferred communication that was relatable and had a value-based component rather than fear-based or product driven.

Also, from the analysis, it was found that there are many different consumer segments and that their priorities and concerns are different; therefore, the need for segment-specific communications exists. Furthering the point of needing consistent communications across multiple touchpoints versus creating brand trust were also investigated as key contributors to building consumer confidence and increasing perceived value for life insurance through meaningful communication with all consumers across all segments.

5.4 Media Findings

During the media planning project it was recognised that life insurance is a high involvement product and therefore requires ongoing communication and repeated exposure in order to develop trust and improve recall. Additionally, it was identified that no one media channel can adequately reach the different consumer segments identified nor meet all communication objectives.

Traditional media channels were determined to be very influential in helping to enhance both visibility and credibility of the brand, while digital channels provide opportunities for engagement and continuous relationship-building with consumers. The analysis demonstrated that utilising a combination of digital & traditional media can provide a more effective way for brands to build trust with consumers and foster increased consumer awareness by allowing for consistency across numerous points of buyer contact.

5.5 Key Findings

Findings showed that the biggest problem for private life insurers is that their customers do not trust them rather than not knowing about them, and trust governed all consumer interactions, analysis of competitor behaviour, and communication studies. In all three areas, trust emerged as a major driver of purchasing intention and long-term preferences.

Also, findings showed that customers have different needs and issues based on their segment, so relevant and personalized communication is extremely important. Finally, findings confirmed the need for consistency across all communication channels and emphasized the importance of taking an integrated approach to enhance consumer confidence. In conclusion, effective communication should show how life insurance is a way to achieve long-term financial security and wealth creation, rather than being simply an expense.

6. OPTIONS CONSIDERED

6.1 Product Oriented Communication

When creating a campaign, one of the ways to communicate was to focus mainly on the product's features (how many you can buy), how to return products, the product's return policies, etc. Although focusing on products (and their features) can help with becoming more aware of individual products, this method would limit the number of opportunities to deal with consumers and develop emotional connections with consumers. In the consumer research, the consumer identified "trust" as an important indicator of whether the consumer would buy something; thus this approach of focusing only on the product would be inadequate to aid in developing deeper relationships with consumers and establishing long-lasting trust with consumers.

6.2 Protection Oriented Communication

Another method to communicate was to show how life insurance can provide protection from the unexpected. This method should adequately communicate the reason for buying life insurance. However, "while this method provides an explanation of trade-off between the financial asset and financial burden," a focus on protection and risk can cause people to see life insurance as an ongoing expense instead of a financial asset. Additionally, this method gave the company limited opportunities to develop positive and aspirational brand connections; therefore, the overall effectiveness of this method to change the consumer's opinions about life insurance would be limited and would reduce the consumer's ability to connect with the brand.

6.3 Positioning Strategy Based on Trust in Terms of Investment and Protection

The final approach combined the concepts of protecting finances, planning long-term, and creating wealth with communications focused on building trust. The intent of the campaign was to reposition life insurance from simply being a safeguard against uncertain future events to being an integral part of overall financial planning and a long-term investment towards achieving future goals. This method closely aligned with consumer's aims and provided solutions to trust-related barriers identified during the market research work. Therefore, it was deemed to be the most effective approach to build consumer trust in the brand and help consumers view life insurance as both a necessity and long-term financial investment.

7. RECOMMENDATIONS

Recommendations that stem from the results of this research include the following:

- Implement Trust-Building Communication Methods - There should be strengthened communications through a consumer-centred and transparent method, eliminating barriers to trust and providing comfort in terms of long-term investments and dependability.
- Provide a Position on the Role of Life Insurance - The messages used to communicate about life insurance need to evolve from a traditional protection-focus towards emphasizing the potential of life insurance to increase wealth, aid in developing a financial plan and aid in reaching one's long term goals.
- Tailor Communication for Each Consumer Segment - Given that each consumer will have different priorities at different points in their life, tailored messages for each specific segment of consumer based on their respective needs will improve the relevancy and engagement of life insurance messages.
- Use Simple Language in Insurance Communications - Reduce complex financial terms to simple, relatable and easy-to-understand messaging to build consumer understanding and confidence.
- Establish an Integrated Media Presence with a Balanced Use of Both Digital and Traditional Media - Utilize both digital and traditional media in a well-balanced manner to provide consistent messaging, increase ease of recall of messages, and increase brand awareness through multiple consumer touchpoints.
- Use Information-Based and Value-Based Communication to Leverage Consumer Education and Financial Awareness in Life Insurance Products - Provide more information-based and value-based communication to enhance consumer financial awareness and contribute to consumers' perceptions of life insurance products as a long-term financial asset versus simply a cost.
- Consistent Messaging at Each Consumer Touchpoint is Necessary to Build Brand Trust and Develop a Cohesive Brand Experience - Delivering consistent messaging across different communications methods and touchpoints is critical to reinforcing consumer trust in the brands of life insurance companies and providing a cohesive and unified brand experience.

8. KEY LEARNINGS

During the past 10 weeks of the internship, the following practical and theoretical learnings have been acquired:

- Consumer Behavior & Brand Confidence: Throughout my studies, I have come to understand that in India, brand confidence is the key barrier to making an insurance purchase. Consumers do not delay in making a purchase due to a lack of awareness, they delay because they are unsure whether insurers will fulfil their long-term obligations.
- Theoretical Framework Implementation: As part of my work in this domain, I have developed an understanding of how to utilize the Mayer, Davis, and Schoorman (1995) trust model, as well as Ajzen's (1991) Theory of Planned Behaviour, to perform consumer research by categorizing social media content and survey responses according to the definitions of their trust dimensions.
- Competitive Assessment: As part of my research, I was able to create benchmark measures across multiple criteria for comparing an insurance brand with other insurance brands to identify the specific deficiencies in building trust communications that can be exploited for ABSLI.
- Social Media Investigations: I was able to detect how different social media platforms are used to build up trust. Instagram provides the best opportunity for creating a personal connection with the brand and establishing emotional attachment; Facebook and YouTube allow for developing a much deeper trust through the use of testimonials, claims data, and lengthier content about the brand.
- Consumer Segmentation: I learned there are different priorities for consumers and different barriers regarding trust depending on where you are in your life. Hence, to communicate effectively about insurance, your message must be segmented to the various life stages of your consumer base as each group has different concerns and needs.
- Media Planning: I have learned how to calculate reach, estimate costs and select time slots for Television, Radio and Newspapers; however, in addition, I need to be aware that each traditional channel has different perceived value with regards to signalling relative trust for differing demographic groups.
- Campaign Development: I have learned how to develop and implement a centralized concept of the campaign that is linked to the concept of repositioning the brand's current trust position to a different position and then adapt the concept to different target audience groups in a credible manner.
- AI-assisted Marketing: I have learned how to design prompt engineering that allows me to create scripts that are targeted by segment; to code my large data sets of text, and to increase my capacity to plan content faster than before, but always retain human control over the outcome and have the content meet regulatory compliance.

- Communication through an Integrated Communications Approach: The internship helped me to see how important it is to be consistent over different types of communication mediums. Through my internship, I learned how the use of digital and traditional mediums work together to build awareness, increase consumer confidence in a brand, and help consumers remember a message. I now see how important it is to use an Integrated Communication model, rather than just relying on one form of medium.

9. CONCLUSION

The internship at Aditya Birla Capital Limited gave me an opportunity to connect the academic theory of life insurance with how people really buy it. The numerous marketing activities I undertook like competitor/consumer analysis, social media, content planning, campaign development, etc., helped me to better understand the significance of brand trust when it comes to influencing consumer behaviour and buying decisions. My research concluded that, while product features and price continue to play a role in people's decisions to buy life insurance, trust has become the most powerful factor that determines the acceptance of life insurance by consumers. Transparency, credibility, and the need for long-term commitment by the insured person or family were some of the reasons for the emphasis on relevant and trust-based communication strategies. At the same time, my observations during my internship highlighted the need to employ an integrated marketing communications approach when repositioning life insurance from a product of protection or an expense to part of the overall financial plan for creating wealth. Overall, through my internship experience, I gained a greater understanding of consumer behaviour, media planning and marketing communications and improved my ability to apply theoretical principles to real-world business models more effectively.

ADITYA BIRLA CAPITAL — LIFE INSURANCE MEDIA MAPPING
Segment	Primary Medium	Secondary Medium	Channels / Publications / Station	Peak Timing	Days	Top Genre (Survey)	Top Channel (Survey)	Media Objective	Reasons for Recommendation
Mid to High Income	TV/News	TV + News	CHNC TVB, Asa Tab, NDTV, Economic Times, Times of India, Daily News, Parvati	Night 9 PM-12 AM (dominant)	Both Weekdays & Weekends (important)	Business, Finance & Economics, News & Current Affairs	CHNC TVB (highest mentions), Asa Tab	Disc financial planning awareness and insurance consideration among urban and financially aware consumers	Television emerged as the dominant medium, with strong preference for business and finance content. CHNC TVB and Asa Tab consistently appeared among preferred channels, indicating high engagement with financial and current affairs programming. Newspaper supports deeper education and consideration among business and financial professionals during daily commute. Competitive campaigns such as HDFC Life and Tata AIG also relied heavily on TV + Print + Transit media for financially aware audiences.
Self Employed & Business Owners	TV/News	TV + Airport, OOH	CHNC TVB, ET Now, Asa Tab, Economic Times, Business Standard, Daily T15, Mumbai TV, Report, Aarav	Night 9 PM-12 AM (dominant)	Both Weekdays & Weekends (important)	Business, Finance & Economics	CHNC TVB (highest mentions), ET Now	Generate qualified leads and encourage insurance adoption through business focused communication	This segment showed the strongest concentration of business news consumption, making CHNC TVB and ET Now the most relevant channels. Newspaper remains highly relevant as it was more accessible across corporate and professional circles. Airport and transit media also provides additional utility among frequent business travelers and decision-makers. The media mix aligns with competitive insurance campaigns that use Business TV, Print and Airport spaces to reach top corporate audiences.
Away From Home	TV	Radio, OOH	Sony SAB, Star Plus, Sony New, FM Radio (Radio Nech, Radio FM, FM 93.7), Transit OOH	Night 9 PM-12 AM (dominant)	Both Weekdays & Weekends	Entertainment & Drama, Movies	Sony SAB (highest mentions), Sony New	Build awareness, recall and family protection consideration through high-reach entertainment media	Television remains the strongest medium due to preference for entertainment and movie-based content. Sony SAB, Star Plus and Sony New showed strong reach and engagement. Music complements TV because this audience spends significant time commuting and traveling independently. OOH provides exposure in transit-heavy environments and reinforces campaign recall. The combination of TV, Radio and OOH delivers consistent exposure.
